Chinese White Dolphins

Many endangered animals live in Hong Kong, such as Black-faced Spoonbills, Chinese White Dolphins and Romer's Tree Frogs. However, the number of the animals is decreasing.

Chinese White Dolphins live in the sea. Some people throw rubbish in the sea. Factories make a lot of dirty water. Dirty water from human activities make Chinese White Dolphins hard to find food. Therefore, many dolphins die.

Since people want to build lots of buildings, the dolphins lose their home and food. They cannot find food so they die. These are the reasons why Chinese White Dolphins are in danger.

There are many ways that the government can do to save the animals. First, the government should establish some laws to protect the endangered animals. Besides, the government can educate the public to protect the endangered species.

On the other hand, we can stop making pollution to keep the sea clean. We can also stop buying animal skin to save the endangered animals.
